How we use cookies

A cookie is a small text file which asks permission to be placed on your computer's hard drive. Once you agree, the file is added, and the cookies are used to make our website work more efficiently and to help us to provide you with a good overall experience.

We use three types of cookies: Strictly necessary cookies

These are essential to enable you to move around our website and use its features. These features include the ability to access secure areas of our site, for example, your account. Performance cookies

We use these to collect information about how you use our website, for example, what pages you visit as well as if you experience any errors. These cookies do not collect any information that can personally identify you i.e. all information collected is anonymous and we use them solely to improve the functionality of our website. Functionality cookies These help to provide certain navigation elements of our website which also enhance your browsing experience. They also help us to remember your preferred setting choices which, again, helps us to improve your visit to our site.

It's important to be aware that third parties may also use cookies of which we have no control over, including, for example, advertising networks for services such as web traffic analysis services. The default setting for cookies on our site is set to 'allow all cookies' to improve your overall experience on our site. However, if you choose to block cookies, please be aware that you may not be able to access all or parts of our site.

Overall, cookies help us provide you with a better website, by enabling us to monitor which pages you find useful and which you do not. A cookie in no way gives us access to your computer or any information about you, other than the data you choose to share with us.

You can choose to accept or decline cookies on our web page but doing so may prevent you from taking full advantage of the website. Links to other websites

Controlling your personal information. Your rights.

You may choose to refuse or restrict the collection of your personal information or how we use your personal information. This can be done in the following ways:

- Should you choose to exercise your right to prevent such processing completely, you can do so by writing to or emailing us.
